The devil, in tempting Jesus to jump off “the pinnacle of the temple,” quoted words from the book of Psalms (91:11-12), “He [God] will give orders to his angels about you ... On their hands they will carry you, lest you strike your foot against a rock.” Jesus showed that one should not draw a conclusion from one passage of Scripture if his conclusion would make him violate another passage of Scripture. In this case, the theatrical exhibition of jumping off the temple pinnacle would violate another passage of Scripture, which he quoted to Satan: “Again it is written, ‘You shall not make trial of the Lord your God’” (Deut. 6:16; Matt. 4:6-7).

The principle, “Again it is written,” of putting one passage alongside another is a search for “the whole counsel of God” (Acts 20:27), because “The sum [totality] of your word is truth” (Ps. 119:160). God’s book is so written that by “proof-texting” alone one can prove anything. Alone “proof-texting” misleads people who read verses, not to learn, but to prove their own ideas. God “sends to them a working of error, that they should believe a lie” and condemn themselves (2 Th. 2:11-12). Jesus thanked the Father that divine truths are “hidden” from those who, in their own estimation, are “wise and intelligent,” while the Father has “made them known to children. Yes, Father, for so in your will” (Mt. 11:25-26). This article is devoted to a discussion of [two] passages which, taken alone, could lead to false doctrines.

ACTS 13:48 — Of some Gentiles Luke wrote that “as many as were ordained to eternal life believed” (Acts 13:48). Alone, Luke’s statement is used to attempt to prove that nobody has control of his own destiny, that “eternal life” is “ordained” for some people unconditionally. But “Again it is written” that everybody does have control of his own destiny, that every person “ordained for eternal life” will “give account of himself to God” (Romans 14:12), and that God “will render to every man according to his works” (Romans 2:6). “Again it is written” that “there is no respect of persons with God” (Romans 2:11), and “all of us must appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that each one may receive the things he did in the body, whether good or bad” (2 Corinthians 5:10).

JOHN 6:37 — Those holding to the impossibility of apostasy find support in Jesus’ words, “I will never cast out the one who comes to me” (John 6:27). But “Again it is written” that those who will never be “cast out” are they who “hear my voice” and “follow me” (John 10:27). However, if they become “lukewarm,” they will hear Jesus say, “I will vomit you out of my mouth” (Revelation 3:16).

(Mitchell & Devon are cousins of Jonathan's and have been visiting with us.)
