I recently read an article Ben had posted on Facebook via The Gospel Coalition titled “Moms with Hands Full Need the Church.” As I read the article I thought how Christians should always show love and support for each other, especially to young parents. If there was ever a time to put our support and encouragement into action, it would be with a family that has little ones.

As a mom, trying to bring my 3 little ones to church by myself, it was very difficult to attend alone. Just the process of getting them up, feeding, dressing, and getting everyone out the door on time was a challenge in itself. You try your best to entertain them so they will sit quietly and not disturb others trying to worship. As a Christian mother who also wanted to worship and be fed by God’s Word, my focus was in attempting to keep my children quiet, which parents know, does not always happen. Many, many times I left services feeling defeated only because of frustration. I had not been able to worship God or even listen to His Word. I wondered, why did I even bother to attend?

As I reflected back on my experiences, I remembered one important fact. These children are our future. The “voices” of these children should be music to our ears, they are our future church. Mothers and fathers are, by example, trying to bring up their children to love God. We should share our love for God by supporting and helping these Christian mothers and fathers, not discouraging them or allowing them to lose heart.

Christians have no idea how encouraging that support is to a parent. Take a moment to say a kind word, give them a pat on the back, or cheer them on in their efforts to bring their little ones. It makes a difference! I know. I lived it.
