When David faced with the guilt of his sin with Bathsheba, the prophet Nathan said, "The Lord has put away your sin; you shall not die" (2 Samuel 12:13). David sighed with a bit of relief that day, but he vastly underestimated the consuming fire that sin had begun in his own home. As a consequence of his great evil, "Thus says the Lord, 'Behold I will raise up evil against you out of your own house'" (12:11).

The years that would follow would be hard for David. His child by Bathsheba would die shortly after the scene mentioned above (12:15-18). David's son Amnon would rape his own sister Tamar (13:1-14). David's son Absalom would murder Amnon for his crime (13:23-33). Absalom would later conspire to rebel against his father, King David (15:1-12). David fled from Jerusalem and conceded the capitol to Absalom's rebellion for a time. During the civil war that followed, Absalom himself would be killed (18:9-15).

When David finally hears of Absalom's death, the text reads as follows. "And the king was deeply moved and went up to the chamber over the gate and wept. And as he went, he said, 'O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! Would I had died instead of you, O Absalom, my son, my son!'" (2 Samuel 18:33) I do not believe David was wishing he had died on the battlefield that day. I believe he was wishing he could had died all those years ago when he had sinned, rather than live to see the consequence of sin being lived out by his son.

We believe the lie that we are in control when we take our lives back from God and choose to live as we wish. However, we are never more out of control than when we sin. Sin will take you farther than you want to go, keep you longer than you want to stay, and cost you more than you want to pay. It has neither boundaries nor restraints. Our attempts to hide it only fan the flame. Our efforts to direct it consume us. We try to control it, only to become its slave.

If we want to see the consequence of sin, we need only look at the twisted wreck of David's life. We need only look at our own life and its failures. We need only look at this once good world gone so horribly wrong. We need only look at the Cross where our sins make their final play for power, only to be crushed by the Resurrected Savior.

Thanks be to God for his mercy. He sees in humanity something worth saving from the wreck of sin's consequences, and only He has the love and power to do it.

Prodigal Son or Love of the Father?

Should the parable of the Prodigal Son be called the “Loving Father” instead? In his book “The Power of the Story,” Leighton Ford asks this question and then explains why the Parable should be called “The Loving Father.” As Christians, we tend to see the parable of how a person can sin badly, wander completely off course, and still come back to God. We see it as a story about a person having a change of heart, realizing his guilt, and then seeking the Lord’s forgiveness. And granted this is a good application.

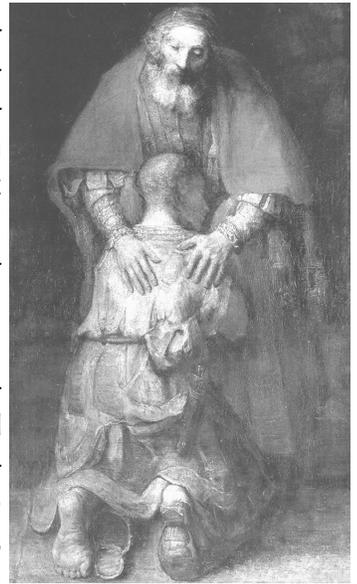

But if we step back a minute and look at it from a different perspective, we can see it from Leighton Ford’s point. Jesus gave this parable immediately after telling two other parables: “the Parable of the Lost Coin” and “the Parable of the Lost Sheep.” In both of these parables and the Prodigal Son parable, the appreciation for that which was lost is easily seen. The woman searches diligently for the lost coin as does the shepherd for his lost sheep. And the father of the prodigal son is so happy to see his son that he forgets all about what his son did to him. He immediately runs to his son, gives him a big hug and has a feast for him. The father forgets his dignity, forgets the insult and the lack of respect that his son showed to him. He doesn’t care about any of that. He is overwhelmed with relief and happiness that his son has returned.

Furthermore when Jesus spoke this parable, he might very well have been directing it to the Pharisees as well as to the sinners in his audience. The Pharisees, the so called religious people of the time, did not understand Jesus being among sinners and talking to them. They condemned Jesus for his association with sinners. They did not see the love that God has for all people and that it is His greatest desire that all people repent and come back to Him.

Today, we must see the lost from God’s perspective. Leighton Ford says it this way: “Our vision for evangelism emerges as we identify with the father in the story, as we look out across our neighborhoods and our world and see the shame and misery of the prodigal people. We receive our vision as we look at the world through the loving eyes of the Father. That is the vision that must grip our imagination as we look into the eyes of the people around the office, on the campus and over the back fence. That is the vision that should transform our character, that changes us so that we become natural storytellers, living and telling the story of God’s love.”

The vision that Leighton Ford is talking about is to realize the amazing love that the Father has for all people and do what we can to share that truth with our friends. And this ‘Love of the Father’ should inspire us to the utmost of our ability.
